ABSTRACT

Indian society has since ages greatly valued the dignity and worth of the individual. It has always been committed to the creation of an untrammelled atmosphere for the growth and development of a free, rational, and responsible citizenship. We live in an era of unprecedented change and this predicament has profound educational implications. It is a rapidly changing world that idolizes speed and automation (Skidmore and Thackeray, 1976). The rapidity and complexity of change in the social, economic, political and technological aspects of life present major problems in designing educational programs in keeping with the needs of people; especially the youth. Social work is the professional activity of helping individual group and community organisation which directly linked with society. In this compartment, this paper is prepared exclusively to study the reflections of social work intervention in meeting the demands of the society.
