SOCIAL JUSTICE AND THE CONSTITUTION OF INDIA - A STUDY ON CHILD LABOUR

Dr.Katta Rambabu¹

ABSTRACT

Social Justice varies from time to time and from generation to generation. It cannot be the same in rich and highly developed nations and in poor developing nations. In short, the concept of social justice is not a fixed concept, but an every-changing one, from time to time, place to place and varying according to the needs of the society concerned. The justice of a social scheme depends essentially on how fundamental rights and duties are assigned and on the economic opportunities and social condition in the various sectors of society. Hence an attempt has been made in this paper to present the incidence of child labour, a chronological list of enactments made by the government of India reduce the child abuse (its achievements) and precautionary measures suggested in the regard.
